Those is largely due to a kind of ideological fusion.

The ideas and values of Korea's radical and progressive forces were hardly distinguishable from those of their conservative opponents. (①) For example, conservative nationalists and their radical counterparts may hold sharply different views about the nation's recent history, such as the role of the United States in the Korean peninsula or national reunification. (②) However, the ideas of statism and developmentalism created links between them and transformed their conflict into a fusion. (③) Thus, no matter how different the ideological outlooks and attitudes of the two forces, both were deeply influenced by state-centered developmentalism, the most important legacy of the Park Chung-hee era. (④) This is most clearly spoken in the reformist governments, particularly in the economic policy of the Kim Dae-jung government during the 1997 financial crisis. (⑤)
