> Passionate opposition to scientific 'encroachment' into history exists, usually from the opposite perspective against natural science.

History joins astronomy and volcanology in being an evidentially founded but non-experimental discipline. (①) We do not find theorists arguing that history should be written in contravention of the evidence. (②) Nonetheless, to ask how and to what extent the evidence should guide historical accounts does permit substantive debate. (③) Some feature of humanity is deemed essential to history: emotion, rationality, free choice, or cultural meaning. (④) Yet that feature, it is argued, is in principle invisible to or inexplicable by a scientific history. (⑤) Behind these concerns often lies a more nebulous concern that an exclusive use of natural science will have deleterious effects on our understanding of ourselves.
