Nor is animal production in industrialized societies an efficient way of producing food, on grains and other foods that we could have eaten directly.

If animals count in their own right, our use of animals for food becomes questionable - especially when animal flesh is a luxury rather than a necessity. (①) Eskimos living in an environment where they must kill animals for food or starve might be justified in claiming that their interest in surviving overrides that of the animals they kill. (②) Most of us cannot defend our diet in this way. (③) The overwhelming weight of medical evidence indicates that animal flesh is not necessary for good health or longevity. (④) When we feed these grains to animals, only about 10 percent of the nutritional value remains as meat for human consumption. (⑤) So, with the exception of animals raised entirely on grazing land unsuitable for crops, animals are eaten neither for health, nor to increase our food supply.
